She simply told the woman ago, the letter amounted to a piece of insueven in the opinion of the CAPTAIN-SUPER-INTENDENT himself, the letter could not have to representations which are made in a prointendent of Police, who knew his duties, upon this point, as there is no doubt that duties as to receive a document of the kind. If we are to conclude that the letter was of eriminal prosecution, and sentencing a man to three months' hard labour, it is obvious that it was entirely from Mr. DEANE'S extraordinary want of decision in receiving the document, without any protest, and merely with a few general observations as to the terms upon which the constables could leave the force, that the whole difficulty arose. . The Magistrato did not take into consideration, in his decision, whether the fact that Mr. DEANE did not pronounce the document insubordinate, and return it at once, did not in a great degree, if not entirely, condone the offence, and estop hir from charging insubordination at a later date. We put the point, however, to the nublic, and have no doubt whatever of their verdict: It was clearly Mr. DEANE's part to hand back the document at once, if it contained auxthing which was of so insubordinate a character as to form the groundwork for a criminal prosecution. But what does he do? Why he parleys with the man about terms accepts the letter, and actually sends it on to the Governon-receives an insubordinate letter from a policeman, sends an insubordinate letter to His Excellency!

The impression which would obviously be conveyed to the constable by his chief re ceiving the letter and forwarding it on to the Governor, was that at all events there was nothing in it that was even considered a breach of discipline, much less as insubordination." Looking at it, therefore, merely as a statement of a pesonal grievance, he sends it on to a newspaper, and this becomes his second offence. If, however, Mr. DEANE'S thence here. receiving the letter was-as we are confident everyono will feel—a condonation of such parts of it as were in any way of an inschordinate character, then 'the matter resolves itself In respect to any offence on the part of the defendant merely into the publication of a at 4.30 p.m., when everything went off with document, which, as far he could judge, was satisfaction. simply a statement of facts which the Sc-question whother a policeman is precluded from publishing a personal statement, with his name attached to it. If there is a rule which deprives him of this right, and above all, if there is any rule, which can make it possible to torture a man's appealing to the public into an act of insubordination punishable by imprisonment with hard labour, that rule is arbitrary and oppressive beyond any regulation of a similar kind existing in any free country. A policeman is merely a Civil servant, and ought not to be deprived of the same period last year. an invaluable right of which no other citizen is not a, military force, and the demands of discipline are not such that a man entering it should be deprived of his civil rights. Civil servants in other departments have the right to send communications to the papers bearing their signatures—why then should period for which it has been let. a policeman be punished with three months' hard labour, for doing so? In the present case, after Mr. DEANE had received the letter without protest, the utmost that publishing the communication could amount to was a want of discipline of a comparatively small character. It is certainly hard upon the men in the Force if they are to be placed in gaol. with felons for making their grievances known to the public, and it is impossible to conclude that the letter was in itself in any way obviously insubordinate, without also concluding that the CAPTAIN-SUPERINTENDENT made a very grievous error in receiving it, and only discovering that it was insubordinate when it appeared in the paper. We can hardly conceive that in the face of this General. glaring inconsistency, the Authorities will allow the decision to stand unaltered, or, if they do, that the public will allow the matter to pass without protest.

"The unfortunate incident which has arisen is, however, of as great importance in its general bearing as in its direct merits. It is Orders for Uppies may be sent to the Daily only one indication among many, which there have been of late, of an unsatisfactory state of affairs, among the Europeans in the Police Force. The real difficulty, as it appears to us, is simply that there is not sufficient provision for men to have their grievances heard. We speak advisedly upon this point, because it has been brought to our cognisance in a variety of ways that this is the chief thing that the men feel. The CAP-TAIN SUPERINTENDENT assumes by far too often a position of antagonism to the police, overlooking that men can be often led where they cannot be driven, and as a natural consequence matters which could be easily settled by a little tack and management, assume a magnitude which does not at all belong to them. is, of course, undesirable that policemen should write to the public papers to state under 30 . The King had left the town, but their grievances, but it is only natural they New York. .... Mesers. S. M. PETTINGILL & Co. should do so when they find that they have absolutely no other means of redress. If the present case were a solitary one, we should be disposed to look upon it doubtfully, but complaints similar to those which are made by Castello are common among the men. It is not to be believed that forty men who have borne good characters at home become suddenly changed on coming out here, or that there is not at least some good cause for the frequent complaints which are made. We are confident that H.E. the Governor is not estreet. aware of the existence of the cause of difficulty above indicated, or he would take steps to remedy it, as he has sufficient knowledge of On their return they found the man had taken men to be aware how demoralising such a

A mistake is made in constitutso insubordinate a character as to justify a ing the Police Force upon a species of mili-bought the child on the 22nd inst. tary basis. It is a civil force, and cannot, if it is to work satisfactorily, be subjected to the rigid discipline which may be appropriate in charged by Indian constable No. 652, with a regiment. The simple fact is that policemen must of necessity belong to a class of men who are in the habit of exercising their judgment and discretion, and such men cannot be expected to submit to a discipline the same rigidity as is applied to soldiers who kan, a marine hawker at Honam, with being in have absolutely nothing to do but to obey the commands given to them. The two classes dock. of service are essentially different, and a mistake has been made in adopting this semimilitary style in the Force. A shrewd congenial superintendent—endowed with a practical knowledge of police matters, and able to understand the wants and the feelings of his men, and to maintain discipline without thrusting them off at too great a distance, would be worth a dozen "Captains" more disposed to play at soldiers than to

The sorrow of all sorrows Was never sung or said. Though many a poet borrows The mourning of the dead. And darkly buries pleasure In some melodious measure: The loss of youth is sadness To all who think, or feel. -A wound no after gladness Can ever whally heal; And yet, so many share it, We learn at last to bear it. The faltering and the failing

Of friends is sadder still; For friends grown foes, assailing, Know when and where to kill: But souls themselves austrining, Have still a friend remaining ! The death of those who love us. And those we love, is sore: But think they are above us, Or think they are no more.-We bear the blows that sever,

We cannot weep forever! The sorrow of all corrows Is deeper than all theso, And all that anguish borrows -Upon its bended knees; No tears nor prayers relieve it, No loving yows deneive it. It is one day to waken And find that lave is flower And cannot be o'ertaken, -And we are left alone :-No woo that on be spoken, No beart that can be broken!

Or something in its stead; No missing it, and yearning As for the dearer dead: But everlasting sorrow! -Scribner's Magazine.

No wish for love's returning,

VOLTAIRE'S AGE. Biographers have differed as to both place and the precise time of Voltaire's birth; and be himself has assigned different dates to it at different periods. As if the spirit of scepticism had been destined to beset his life from the beginning, the first exercise of it has been made at the expense of his baptismal register, which bears date 22nd November, 1694, and certifies his birth as having taken place on the day previous. M. Desnoiresterres' researches have fixed his birthplace at Paris' about the date given by the register; and there is no reason whatever for crediting by preference any of the various fancy dates scattered about in his correspondence. The older he made himself, the less, he imagined, would the authorities dare to persecute him. "Don't say, I beg of you," he writes to D'Argental, in January, 1777 (the year before his death,) "that I am only eighty-two; it is a cruel calumny. Even were it true, according to a cursed baptismal register, that I was born in November, 1694, it must still be granted me that I am in my eighty-third year."-From the Quarterly Review.

MR. PITT'S PRESENT TO HIS

GODSON. The Right Honourable William Pitt stood as one of my sponsors: but as that illustrious statesman died when I was in my sixth year. I have only a faint recollection of him. I do remember a tallish spare man, with a rather red face, asking me what I intended to be, and, upon my mother responding "a soldier," Mr. Pitt forwarded me a very handsome sword, which had been presented to him by some public body, upon his appointment as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. Upon the blade of this sword Mr. Pitt's crest is beautifully engraved, add I need scarcely add it is treasured by me as the gift of one of whom it has been truly said by his noble biographers, "Glorious was his course, and long the track of light he left behind him. May that course be followed, may, may that track of light be trod in by many,—very many statesmen of the coming time. Some only can partake of its glory, but all may be guided by its ray."-" My Recollections." Lord William Lennox.

He looked at her absently, and then exclaimed, in a voice that terrified her, "Dead! she is dead at last! Oh God!" Gwen asked no questions, but she lighted the fire, and, unheeded by him, prepared him some strong coffee. She did not return to her bed until she heard him go to his room and lock his door-a proceeding unusual to him. She could not rest for terror lest he should commit some rash act; so she dressed again and went out in search of the policeman Williams, who, she knew, was at that time on duty in the town. She found him, and, in few words, said she feared her master was ill, telling him to knock at his door on some pretence or other. -He improvised a question at her command, and received for answer a stern "Do as you think best, but don't disturb me on such fool's errands."
